Students of the PhD study programme in Literature and Cultural Identity at the Faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences in Osijek are pleased to announce the first International Conference on Literature in Osijek, which will take place from 2nd to 3rd March 2018 at the Faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences in Osijek, Croatia. It will provide an opportunity for young scholars (MA and PhD students, graduates and scholars who have recently obtained a PhD) to present and discuss their academic papers in a friendly, yet professional environment. Providing an opportunity for exchange of information, ideas, and views, the aim of the conference is to connect young and promising researchers who share an interest in literature.

¹ Simultaneous translation into English will be provided for potential presentations in Croatian.

TOPIC: Affirmation of Fundamental Human Values in Literature

The affirmation of fundamental human values is an omnipresent intention in art. The affirmation degree of these values has been changing through history, but they have survived until today, which is confirmed primarily by literary works and art as a whole.

Readers often (consciously and unconsciously) require from a literary text to affirm their own system of values, or to question it, and strive toward a better one. In the literature of the Western society, this is reflected in the affirmation of the values that were marginalized in certain periods as well as in the most of the 20th century: morality, empathy, love, sacrifice, forgiveness, spiritual growth, honesty, patriotism, etc.

The need for the return of these values appears due to responsibility of literature toward the reader, resulting in the emergence and promotion of thematically optimistic literary works. Such works portray a spectrum of different life situations, such as dealing with problems, conflicts with oneself and/or others, accepting oneself, and relationships with the society. In the end, the heroes learn to cope with what has defined them (childhood, difficulties, life situations, everyday problems, loss, etc.) and reconcile with themselves and the society, which indicates the fundamental message of this kind of literature: life events are meaningful since we learn from them, and every person has their own place in the world that needs to be accepted.

In the 19th and 20th century, literature was marked by an aspiration for direct and indirect social, philosophical, and identity criticism. Fundamental human values have seemingly gone out of fashion, hiding on the margins of high literature, but they have clearly been present in popular and children's literature. Nonetheless, they still had a large audience at that time, suggesting that the readers continue to feel the need for art that affirms their system of values.

In the first decade of the 21st century, the situation in the mainstream literature as well as in the academic community is changing because of the above emphasized fact that the audience has had enough of art that does not satisfy and enlighten it spiritually, thus the affirmation of fundamental values returns to the focal point of literature and academic community.

We invite young scholars to contribute to the conference by researching the affirmation of fundamental human values in literature, reexamining their perceptions over time, and critically studying the relationships between socio-historical circumstances and given topics. Interdisciplinary research is also welcome; research topics are not limited to one literary period.

Possible topics include, but are not limited to:

- Affirmation of fundamental human values in general (humanity, morality, empathy, love, sacrifice, heroism, forgiveness, spirituality, faith, sincerity, tradition, nation, nobleness, tolerance, etc.)

- Affirmation of fundamental human values and an individual
 - acceptance and development of identity
 - acceptance of life
 - acceptance of death
 - acceptance of physical flaws and illnesses
 - acceptance of life circumstances
 - acceptance of one's own otherness
 - the right to fundamental human rights

- Affirmation of fundamental human values and a family/group/community/society
 - acceptance of family members
 - acceptance of a partner
 - acceptance of friends
 - the right to a second chance
 - the right to say "no"
 - integration of minorities/indigenous peoples
 - acceptance of racial/class/religious/ethnic otherness

Presentations will last up to 20 minutes with additional 10 minutes for questions, comments, and discussion. The application form, along with an abstract of the proposed paper (up to 250 words) and a short biography should be submitted by e-mail to the organizers (internationalconferenceiclos@gmail.com) by 15 December 2017. Notification of acceptance of abstracts will be given by 15 January 2018.
